THINK, EAT, WEAR GAY COLORS, 'JERSEY LILY'S' YOUTH SECRET

Lady de Bathe, Now 60 Years Old, Arrives Here as Rosy as Debutante, and Says:

"To Keep Young You Must Indulge in Gay Colors—Think, Eat and Dress in Them. Don't Wear the Dismal Tints. If You Think in Gay Colors You Can Feel Them and Be Young."

"Have no Gray Thoughts or Dark Brown Regrets and You Will Never Look Old or Haggard. It is the Simplest Secret in the World."

"Men Do Not Learn It and Will Not Learn it and That is Why They Grow Old so Much Faster Than Women. But They are Putting Colors in Now and We Will Have the Man Beautiful."

Radiant as the dawn-kissed waters from which Aphrodite sprang, still crowned with coils of burnished gold, lithe and agile and rosy as a hamadryad, "The Jersey Lily" was waited to these shores again to-day after an absence of six years. Yes, Lady de Bathe is younger than ever, despite her sixty years. She has found the secret of Diane de Poitiers. Time has not laid a blemish on her; there is not a thread of silver in her hair; her eyes are as bright and her laugh is as gay as they were in those distant days when the pines and maples of this generation began to rave about her.

Aboard the great White Star liner Cedric she lusted pre-eminently as the very embodiment of youth. Her gowns outlasted the symbols of Aurora. Gray haired men and women who whispered among themselves that "The Jersey Lily" had taken them upon her lap and kissed their chubby cheeks in boyhood did not dare to face the pristine Lillian and look into those girlish eyes with their own dimming eyes. Her ruddy cheeks and her corrugating evening gown bewitched and stunned them. They marvelled at the unchanged situation of her wrist, at the supple grace of her plumply rounded yet sylphlike figure and the fitting challenge of youth in her color.

ARDENT FOR SUFFRAGE BUT NOT FOR MILITANTS.

Riding up the bay the "Jersey Lily" talked blithely of the days that had passed and yet had not been of her ardor for the suffrage cause, though not the militant kind, of the Man Beautiful as he might become if he followed the latest fashions in whiskers and gaudy clothing, and of her adoration for New York's marvelous skyline.

Lady de Bathe wore a black satin skirt and a waist which had stolen all the wealth of color of the peacock's plumage, an immense black hat trimmed with masses of black ostrich plumes, a cloak of silver gray fur lined with black silk, turquoise shen with jeweled buckles and shimmering hose of translucent blue. Then there was a great stole of silver fox and a muff of the same trimmed with black. Add to this the Lillian color with its everlasting tint, and there is a picture of a woman who would jump over the side of the instant Lady de Bathe came aboard.

To one of the group of admiring in-laws who would know how the bewitching Lillian grew younger and younger, she replied with a dazzling smile.

GIRL THIEF TELLS HOW SHE STOLE TO AID MAN SHE LOVED

Engaged to Harvard Student, She Got Jewels by Swindle to Buy Him an Auto.

WON'T TELL HER NAME.

"Would Rather Go to Jail for Life Than Disgrace My Family," She Says.

Desolate and forlorn on her bench in a Tombs cell, the pretty girl who calls herself Frances Hollender of Chicago and who is held in heavy jail for defrauding department stores, milliners, dressmakers and hotels by the wholesale, stubbornly refused to-day to tell her real name or the address of her parents. A member of the real Hollender family of this city called on her in the Tombs and begged her to tell whether she had taken the name because of relationship and offered to communicate secretly with her own people. She shook her head firmly.

GIRL IS STILL A PUZZLE TO THE POLICE.

"The real truth about myself," she said to an Evening World reporter, "is not nearly as bad as all the things the newspapers have been printing about me. I did tell a number of things about myself which were not so bad, but which I thought might help me to get out. What I am telling now will not help me or hurt me. It may help some other girl keep out of trouble."

In all the young woman's talk there was never an indication of slang or criminal patter. She talked as a girl might have been expected to talk whose trunk is full of music of modern and past masters of melody which was a very triumph of fine acting. It was very genuine. The detective, the prison keeper and the reporters, who are all used enough to lies and shamming, confessed, after two days of listening to her and watching that she is a new puzzle to them.

"Two years ago," she said, "my mother, who is old-fashioned and puritanical in her ideas, and has always kept me very much under her eye and never allowed me to have much fun, did not feel like going to George's Mills in New Hampshire, where we usually spend our summers. She sent me on to be chaperoned by a friend of hers."

FELL IN LOVE WITH A HARVARD MAN.

"There I met a man who was a junior at Harvard, of good family, but not very well to do. He was a football player. Several of his friends were at George's Mills. This man and I fell in love with each other. I still love him and I hope he still loves me."

Here the young woman's voice broke and she dashed away at the tears which filled her big, brown eyes. The tears at any rate were real.

SAYS SHE'S GETTING TO BE A GREAT ORATOR.

"Now, doesn't that sound fine? I am getting better at it every day. At first I was almost tongue-tied when I tried to speak about suffrage. I stuttered and stammered and everybody laughed and giggled. We have all been through that stage, but we stuck to it gamely and are now prepared to go on the platform like so many Burke and Websters. And think what a glorious thing it is going to be for the old maid."

FRANK CHANCE OUT AS CUBS' LEADER, MURPHY DECLARES

Manager Recently Resented Club Owner's Criticism of Players' Habits.

"It is up to Murphy to say whether I shall manage the Cubs next year or not," declared Frank Chance just before leaving here this afternoon for Chicago. "He must, however, either tender me a contract as manager or give me my absolute release."

"Above all things," Chance continued, "I do continue to manage the Cubs. I do not intend to leave the team from the bench as long as you want to."

PENNANT WAS STOLEN BY THE GIANTS, SAYS FOGEL OF PHILLIES.

CHICAGO, Sept. 28.—In a signed statement published to-day in the Chicago Evening Post, Bruce S. Fogel, President of the Philadelphia National League Club, makes a specific charge that umpires deliberately stole the pennant for the New York Giants. At least twenty-one games were won by the Giants this year which have been lost had the umpires been fair, Fogel charges. He also predicts the not distant "rising" of President Lynch of the National League.

ASSASSIN'S VICTIM SAYS HIS BUTLER FIRED FATAL SHOT

Sereno H. Starrett Identifies Prisoner Taken to his Bed-side in Hospital.

SERVANT DROPPED DEAD

Intruder Hid Under Former Employer's Bed to Carry Out His Threat.

John McGuire, accused of firing the shot that may cost the life of his former employer, Sereno H. Starrett, was captured to-day. McGuire was found after an all-night search by Detective John De Vaux hiding in the Tavern, a lodging house at No. 35 Lawton street, New Rochelle. He was wild-eyed with fear and attacked the detective, protesting his name was Billings. McGuire was taken to the New Rochelle Hospital, where Mr. Starrett is dying. There he was identified by the dying man.

SHOT WITH REVOLVER INTRUDER FOUND IN ROOM.

The shot which may result in his death was fired from a .38-caliber revolver, the property of Mr. Starrett, and placed by him last night in a bureau in his room at his home, No. 8 Brookdale place, Rochelle Heights. The assassin had been hiding under a bed for over an hour.

Since the discharge of McGuire Thursday, members of the household were afraid that he might return and put in effect the threat he is reported to have made to Mrs. Starrett when he was let out. No great was the fear when the three photos were first last night Mrs. Luisa Philbrick, a maid in the employ of Mrs. Starrett, dropped dead in bed.

Mr. Starrett has been an invalid for several months. He was preparing to retire last night about 10 o'clock when his wife stepped into the room to assist him to bed.

ONE BULLET STRUCK MR. STARRETT IN ABDOMEN.

One of the three bullets that followed in rapid succession struck Mr. Starrett in the abdomen. The shots brought the servants and Miss Starrett, a daughter, to the door of the room.

"Don't let him get away. He's shot!" Mrs. Starrett began screaming when the assassin brandished the revolver at her and commanded her to keep quiet.

He pushed his way out the door and went past the terrified servants and Miss Starrett, also threatening them with the weapon. Walking downstairs, he escaped by the back door.

Mrs. Starrett fainted and Miss Starrett telephoned for a doctor and the police. He left his bed but he could not move. The doctor found that Mr. Starrett was in a critical condition and would have to undergo an immediate operation. He was hurried to the hospital and Coroner William H. Livingston of New Rochelle was called to take his ante-mortem state and then the man was declared to the Coroner that McGuire shot him.

POLICE GRAFT INQUIRY SUDDENLY POSTPONED AS FRICTION ARISES

Officially Adjourned Because Trail Leading Close to Becker Was Likely to Prejudice Trial for Murder Before Court Action.

$25,000 FUND EXHAUSTED BY PLEDGED PAYMENTS.

Whitman Declares Taxpayers Have Got Nothing for Their Money Except a "Pitiable Exhibition."

The Curran Police Investigating Committee, which was authorized by the Board of Aldermen in the wave of indignation that followed the assassination of gambler Herman Rosenthal and the arrest of Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, halted its work abruptly to-day. No further session will be held until next Saturday.

The official reason for the failure to continue to-day with the examination of Police Commissioner Waldo was that it had been planned to ask him regarding vice conditions and that this line of inquiry might be prejudicial to the trial of Lieut. Becker on a murder charge.

Those who have followed the work of the Committee and have observed the failure to bring out much to show criminality in the Police Department expressed the belief, after the sudden termination of the Committee's work to-day, that its work would be futile. The general impression at the time of the organization of the Committee and the appropriation of $25,000 for its work was that it was to dig deep into the allegation that the Police Department was a cesspool of iniquity.

THREATENED TO INVOKE COURT.

While District Attorney Whitman was in Hot Springs Assistant District Attorney Moss was quoted as saying he feared the committee's inquiry into Police Commissioner Waldo's method of handling his vice and strong arm squads might prejudice the case against Becker.
